it was carl dahlhaus who coined the phrase dead time to describe the state of the symphony between schumann and brahms christopher fifield argues that many of the symphonies dismissed by dahlhaus made worthy contributions to the genre he traces the root of the problem further back to beethoven s ninth symphony a work which then proceeded to intimidate symphonists who followed in its composer s footsteps including schubert mendelssohn and schumann in 1824 beethoven set a standard that then had to rise in response to more demanding expectations from both audiences and the musical press christopher fifield who has a conductor s intimacy with the repertory looks in turn at the five decades between the mid 1820s and mid 1870s he deals only with non programmatic works leaving the programme symphony to travel its own route to the symphonic poem composers who lead to brahms himself a reluctant symphonist until the age of 43 in 1876 are frequently dismissed as epigones of beethoven mendelssohn and schumann but by investigating their symphonies fifield reveals their respective brands of originality even their own possible influence upon brahms himself and in so doing shines a light into a half century of neglected nineteenth century german symphonic music recent decades have seen a flourishing interest in and speculation about the origins of photography spurred by rediscoveries of first photographs and proclamations of photography s death in the digital age scholars have been rethinking who and what invented the medium photography and its origins reflects on this interest in photography s beginnings by reframing it in critical and specifically historiographical terms how and why do we write about the origins of the medium whom or what do we rely on to construct those narratives what s at stake in choosing to tell stories of photography s genesis in one way or another and what kind of work can those stories do edited by tanya sheehan and andrés mario zervigón this collection of 16 original essays illustrated with 32 colour images showcases prominent and emerging voices in the field of photography studies their research cuts across disciplines and methodologies shedding new light on old questions about histories and their writing photography and its origins will serve as a valuable resource for students and scholars in art history visual and media studies and the history of science and technology the miracle of analogy is the first of a two volume reconceptualization of photography it argues that photography originates in what is seen rather than in the human eye or the camera lens and that it is the world's primary way of revealing itself to us neither an index representation nor copy as conventional studies would have it the photographic image is an analogy this principle obtains at every level of its being a photograph analogizes its referent the negative from which it is generated every other print that is struck from that negative and all of its digital offspring photography is also unstoppably developmental both at the level of the individual image and of medium the photograph moves through time in search of other kin some of which may be visual but others of which may be literary architectural philosophical or literary finally photography develops with us and in response to us it assumes historically legible forms but when we divest them of their saving power as we always seem to do it goes elsewhere the present volume focuses on the nineteenth century and some of its contemporary progeny it begins with the camera obscura which morphed into chemical photography and lives on in digital form and ends with walter benjamin key figures discussed along the way include nicéphore niépce louis daguerre william fox talbot jeff wall and joan fontcuberta one of the earliest portrait photographs a daguerreotype represents the danish artist bertel thorvaldsen in spite of the fact that the photograph is signed and dated there has been doubts about the dating and the location of the taking of the picture starting from the photography itself as well as the historical facts the author sets the photography in its proper context written sources material and other pictures are presented to throw light on the photographer the french businessman a c t neubourg's work in scandinavia furthermore the reader gains an insight into the exposure as it is being reflected in the picture where an older conception of art meets the new age of photography the book also contains an appendix by jens frederiksen the royal academy of fine arts school of architecture copenhagen on a c t neubourg's camera lens and daguerreotypes
